

During the past week, the Church has welcomed the latest teaching exercise of the Holy Father in his much anticipated Encyclical Letter on the care of our common home. As with every action of Pope Francis, pundits engage in detailed analysis about how his actions and teaching is a surprise. There have been many reactions, positive and negative, none of which can do justice to a 40,000 word document which has many important things to say to us. Even this small reflection in a Sunday newsletter comes after only brief and initial reflections on a comprehensive text. We would all do well to imitate the humility of our Holy Father and reflect on this special gift of his teaching to us.

Pope Francis has warmed the hearts of many with his simple and cheerful style. He has spoken often of the joy of the Gospel, and his previous encyclical took this as its title. The kind of joy he speaks about is no short-lived superficiality or quick-fix for happiness, but a joy that transforms us. Pope Francis, by his example, shows how we can be joyful at all times, even when faced with great challenges or weighed down by heavy burdens. This kind of joy is infectious, and genuine. It is rooted in the firm knowledge of our God, who loves us into being and draws us to himself. God has given us so great an abundance of good things, but we struggle to rejoice in his gift to us.

The ironic thing in the plethora of reactions to the publication of this text is that these reactions characterise exactly the kind of attitude that is in all of us, which the Pope wishes to challenge. There is too much noise, an over-keen excitement to devour everything, to consume things always. This highlights a deep hunger within us. Pope Francis contrasts the speed of human development with the slow workings of biological evolution. And this, I believe, is his principal message - look around, and see how God is praised in his creation, and rejoice in the knowledge of that, feasting on it. This should help to put our human need in a proper context. "Rather than a problem to be solved, the world is a joyful mystery to be contemplated with gladness and praise." Paragraph 10, Saint Francis.

As we turn our minds to engaging with this new passage of Papal teaching, let's be thankful for the ministry of Peter in the Church, and let's all seek to listen with quiet and humble hearts.
