

LIVING IN THE PAST?

WE accuse people sometimes, don't we?, of living in the past. When change threatens to overwhelm us, there's a temptation to pretend that things are as they have always been, to hold onto a world that is long gone. That's what we mean by living in the past.

It might seem that Christians do, in a very strong sense, live in the past. Our secular critics want to say we hold onto a religion which has had its day, and of course I don't think they're right in that. "Just a few days ago, we were talking in the kitchen about the nativity scene at the Town Hall, which of course already has its Christ-child in it. Fabian said, '(and that) he meant the birth of Jesus, hasn't happened yet-)

Well, the pedant in me wanted to point out to him that the birth of Jesus happened a very long time ago, and if I'd done that, I'd have been right in a rather trivial way and wrong in a deeper way. We Christians live our year by entering the Christian story, so for us, at this point in the story, it makes perfect sense to say of the birth of Christ that it hasn't happened yet. "It doesn't that mean we Christians are living in the past?

It seems to me that the very opposite is the case. Christians are people who are trying to live their lives with Christ. We are trying to conform ourselves to Christ, so that we can say with Paul, 'It is not I that live, but Christ who lives in me.) (and we know that Christ was not just a man of history. He was that, of course. He was the one who gives meaning to all history, and makes sense of all our human stories and histories.

The Jews, even before Jesus' birth, were being prepared by God for the coming of His son. Their law, their nation, their religion, their priests and their prophets all made sense in terms of the coming of the Christ. Their lives pointed forwards to the birth, life, death and resurrection of Jesus.

Does that mean that if their lives pointed forwards, ours point backwards, to the life of Christ already lived out on earth? Yes and no. For us, the life of Christ on earth is central to our faith. The great events of our faith are historical. They actually happened, a long time ago. Part of our celebration of Christmas is a calling to mind and entering into these great events of the past, the coming of God into His Creation as a human being.

But Christ is not only of the past. There is an odd phrase in the book of Revelations, where John records the angels praising God saying, 'Holy, holy, holy is the Lord God (Mighty, who was, and is, and is to come.) Christ is for us a man of history, but he is also the Eternal God, who was, and is, and is to come. In trying to live with the life of Christ, our lives point backwards to the events in the life of Christ. They also point forward to the coming of Christ at the end of time, when God's love will finally triumph.

(and they're also rooted in the here and now. We look back to God's love in sending His son, we look forward to the final victory of love at the end of time, and we live that life of love in the present, making Christ present to those around us, bringing God's kingdom near.
